Teacher professionalism: why are we still talking about it? Judyth Sachs school of education, Macquarie University, sydney, australia Introduction In 2003 I published a book titled The Activist Teaching Profession; in many respects, this was a manifesto for revitalizing the teaching profession, a strategy for public recognition and legitimacy.

Teacher professionalism: why are we still talking about it?

In this paper I present an argument for the development of a new form of teacher professionalism, which I refer to as activist professionalism. I briefly identify two types of professionalism, democratic professionalism and managerial professionalism which I argue have informed recent debates about teacher professionalism.
